Old Hosiery Joins War Drive In Frankfort

A new drive is on for the collection of discarded silk, nylon, rayon silk and cotton and nylon and cotton hosiery which is deemed highly essential in the production of war material including powder bags.

Mayor George Sangmeister of Frankfort received a government request that he appoint someone in Frankfort to supervise the salvage drive among the women of his village for the much needed material. Mayor Sangmeister on Saturday appointed Mrs. Arthur Lambrecht and she in turn will appoint a committee to work with her in this drive which began Monday.

Containers will be placed in the Frankfort stores with the designation "Hosiery collection Depot."

Mayor Sangmeister points out that no grading or sorting is required of the hosiery contributed but that enough of the material must be collected to make a case of 100 pounds which is the minimum amount of a shipment to be made. It requires 1500 pairs of silk stockings or 2300 pairs of nylon stockings to make up 100 pounds.

Mayor Sangmeister further states that hosiery salvage will continue for the duration of the war and that a house to house canvass will be made to collect discarded hosiery.

All the women residents of Frankfort are urged to cooperate in this newest drive and help to make it a success.

Tinley Residents Raise Own Coffee Crop

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Breck of Tinley Park have found a way of securing their coffee supply in spite of the present shortage and the coming coffee ration and that is by raising the coffee beans in their own back yard.

Sometime ago they procured seed for the coffee plants and planted a few rows in their garden and have just harvested their first coffee crop and have roasted the home raised beans. They find it makes a tasty beverage altho the taste is somewhat different from the imported coffee.

TINLEY SCHOOL TO SPONSOR EXTRA READING CLASS

The Tinley Park school is conducting an extra reading class in order to help those who have difficulty in reading. This reading class is a part of school which takes into consideration the individual and the promotion of better school work.

Reading classes of this kind are not new to schools. Most of the larger school systems in the country conduct such classes. Plans were worked out by the teachers of the Tinley Park school and the school is now doing something to assist these young people in the school.

A great deal of credit should be given the teachers who have had to spend many long hours in preparing this work. The enthusiasm of those taking part in the program speaks well for the program. Children who had little interest in the school or the school work have become eager to learn. Other subjects are reflecting this eagerness and these children are making progress never before thought of by them.

Those interested in the school and the school program should visit this class to see the great eagerness of children to learn.

COOK CO. FARMERS TO TAKE UP GASOLINE RATION PROBLEM

If such a man is furnished us notifications will be given farmers of the time and place of these meetings so they can come in and get these extra instructions, states Farm Adviser C. A. Hughes.

MRS. WM. WALKER HOSTESS TO TINLEY WOMAN'S CLUB

A splendid meeting of the Tinley Park Woman's Club was held Wednesday afternoon, under the direction and chairmanship of Mrs. W. B. Combs of the International Relationship Dept. The meeting was held in the home of Mrs. Wm. Walker in the Midlothian Country Club grounds. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have made twelve motor trips to Mexico and have spent over a year in that beautiful country during which time they continually made colored moving pictures which Mrs. Walker showed to the assembled group lecturing as the pictures proceeded. This was most interesting. Mrs. Walker stated that Mexico City is the most beautiful city in the world and is not outdone by even Paris, France.

Highly interesting were the pictures of the pyramids of Mexico made by the Mayan Indians; the marvelously carved temples of a highly civilized people thousands of years before Christ was born; the beautiful gardenias which grow and bloom profusely; the natural habitat of the lowest cast to the cultured; the glorious mountains with their caps of snow, favorably comparable with the Alps.

Also was shown pictures of the annual bull fights, and the last reel was here at home, of the gardens and flowers therein of the home of Mrs. Combs. All these were greatly enjoyed and appreciated.

After the meeting was opened by the president, Mrs. Harry Beggs, and the usual routine business taken care of, Mr. Arthur DeVal of Tinley Park favored with a number of vocal solos, accompanied on the piano by his sister Jane. A lovely tenor voice, and we predict that Arthur has great possibilities and hope nothing will prevent his attaining them.

Mrs. J. Holmes, International Relations Dist. Chairman, spoke on Brazil. Mrs. Dutton, president of the Morgan Park Woman's Club and Mrs. Schmidt, Dist. Chairman of Conservation were present and brought words of greeting.

Mrs. Wm. Breck, Bond chairman of the Club reported that she had sold for the club during the past 3 weeks $483 in US Bonds and stamps.

Tea was served in the dining room, at the close of the meeting from a table covered with a Mexican cloth, with a centerpiece prepared by Mrs. Walker of miniature Mexican people arranged in a holiday gathering. Mrs. Beggs and Mrs. Wm. Breck and Mrs. Wm. Semmler. After tea, the guests enjoyed roaming thru the spacious rooms and looking at the many rare, varied and beautiful Mexican articles which the Walkers have brought back with them on their trips to our Neighbor on the South which they have grown to love and admire, but which they would not exchange for their own United States.

Kovar 20, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kovar R. 1, Frankfort, Ill. last week reported at the US Naval Training school at Great Lakes and is now participating in the Navy's vigorous physical hardening program to train for his biggest fight, against the enemies of the United States.

Recently Mrs. Rachel Slagle presented the village with a large American flag which has been placed on the wall of the village council chamber. The village fathers deeply appreciate this fine gift from Mrs. Slagle.

COACH OF MORTON TWP. HIGH SCHOOL TO BE MOKENA PTA SPEAKER

The subject "Recreation and Physical Education in War Time" will be the subject of Mr. Jack Lipe, Coach, Morton Township High school at the Mokena PTA meeting, 7:45 p.m. November 24th. We know you will want to hear this interesting speaker, also to hear the Mokena band one of our recreational opportunities, which is much help during these times.

In recent years there has been an increasing record in juvenile delinquency, as a well known authority has said, "there are no bad boys" proves that it is not the child himself who fails, but the failure of parents and the community to invest sufficiently in public or private funds for recreational facilities. The youth becomes known by his badness but one who is really interested in him realizes his need of a recreational outlet, outside of his family circle.

We parents of Mokena, because the community is small, feel free to let our children run and play at will, not considering whether their play is wholesome or educational, as long as they are away so that our routine can be carried on. It has been said, "if society doesn't keep youth busy in a constructive way during the whole of their young lives, they in a destructive way will keep society busy in their adult life."

Wouldn't much be gained then if we attended the PTA meeting and hear the plans Mrs. Chas. Rose, PTA Recreational chairman, has made to help our children find an outlet with the proper supervision? We need you parents at this important meeting, regardless of the age of your children. We need you to help in the fight to make better society for youth in this Community, youth so important in democracy.

THE Secret OF THE MARSHBANKS

• BY KATHLEEN NORRIS •

©NORRIS W.N.U. RELEASE

THE STORY SO FAR: Charlotte (Cherry) Rawlings, an orphan at Saint Dorothea's convent school since she was seven, knows almost nothing of her early history. Judge Judson Marshbanks and Emma Haskell are her guardians, and when she is twenty Emma gets her a secretarial job with wealthy Mrs. Porteous Porter in San Francisco for whom Emma is housekeeper. At the Marshbanks mansion she meets the members of the judge's household; his dictatorial old mother; Amy, debutante daughter of his dead brother, Fred; and Fran, his gay young second wife. Kelly Coates, a young artist, sends Cherry a box of candy and she is jealous when he brings Fran to a party at Mrs. Porter's. Emma tells Cherry that her unmarried sister, Charlotte, was Cherry's mother, and she learns from the judge that Amy's father was also her father. Kelly takes Cherry along so Fran will visit his studio and Cherry can see he is very much in love with Fran. Mrs. Porter dies, leaving Cherry $1,500, and she goes to Stanford University, living with the Pringles at Palo Alto. Fran tells Cherry she has decided to do the honorable thing and see Kelly no more, and asks her to be friendly with Kelly, saying he likes Cherry. Soon afterward he asks Cherry to marry him, although Fran will always be the "unattainable" woman. Her answer is no; she wants no Fran in the background. Emma tells Cherry that she is not Charlotte Rawlings but Amy Marshbanks. She describes how her sister Lottie's baby was born while Lottie was secretly with her at the Marshbanks' mansion just before Fred's wife, Amelia, was expecting her baby, and how Lottie exchanged the babies after Fred's wife had been rushed to a hospital.

Now continue with the story.

CHAPTER XIII

"Who knows, Aunt Emma?" Cherry said then, hoarsely.

"Nobody knows. Lottie died of pneumonia when you were seven. No one else knows," she paused. "In a few weeks, if you like, you can tell the judge this. For I think he knows something," Emma said. "It is only my idea; there may be no foundation for it."

Cherry sat opposite the judge in his home library some weeks later, and poured forth the story.

"When will you be twenty-one, Cherry?"

"Next Wednesday."

"You would have known it then, 'You see, Cherry,' Judge Marshbanks continued, 'Lottie was actually in this house, and she had come downstairs that night to—in her despair and weakness and anger—to reproach Fred. She had been so ill—she had so bitterly resented his freedom to enjoy his position, the welcome that was awaiting the other child, that I suppose she hardly knew what she was doing. He didn't know she was staying here, but a few days after that scene, when Amelia and the baby had been taken to the hospital, he was at home in mid-afternoon trying to get some rest, when he heard a baby fretting. He went out into the hall and listened and then went on upstairs."

"Lottie was lying in bed asleep; Emma was out. Fred told me afterward that the floor seemed to rock beneath his feet when he saw Lottie, that he had realized in that second what must be the case. He crossed the hall and opened another door, and there in a basket was the tiny child that was his own. Blue, and gasping for air; he thought it was dying then."

"Fred was older than I, but usually when he got into trouble it was to me that he came. But he didn't dare tell anyone this. When at last he knew you would live, Emma came to us, and we made arrangements for your support, but it wasn't until Fred was dying after a motor smash that he sent for me, and told me. He had had Judge Cornstock in by the time I reached him. Fred said that he had made a statement, and gave me a long envelope that he said Amy was to open when she was twenty-one."

"He said that both you girls would be twenty-one at the same time, and that then Amy was to have his property, and she must be told the truth, and find you, if you were living, and make a complete restitution. Lottie Rawlings was dead then, and you were at Saint Dorothea's. He said—poor Fred!—that both were his daughters, and that as the years had gone by he had come to feel that Amy was Amelia's daughter too, but he hoped that you girls could come to an understanding out of court."

"Then it is true!" Cherry whispered. "But Emma said that there was no proof."

"There was no proof that Emma knew of. And I'm not sure we have proof now," Judson Marshbanks said.

He opened a lower desk drawer, and took from it first a small shining revolver.

"Don't be frightened," he reassured the girl, who was staring at it with widened eyes, "I'd forgotten that it was here; it belongs upstairs. Now this," he added, taking a long envelope from the drawer, and laying it on the desk between them, "is Fred's—your father's will. In this he has also enclosed, I believe, a statement from your mother—or rather from Lottie Rawlings—and his own affidavit that the children, you and Amy, were exchanged in the first hours of their lives. It is marked to be opened on November thirtieth of this year, which will be Amy's twenty-first birthday."

"I brought this home a few days ago from safe deposit, and on Sunday next I think we must break the news. I suppose you knew," the man went on in a changed tone, "that a scamp who has been twice married before, both times to rich women, has got Amy into his toils now? She is in a delirium of love and confidence; she wants to tell us all about it as long as we'll listen!"

He opened a lower desk drawer and took from it first a small shining revolver—

"Amy?"

"Oh, yes. They've known each other only a few weeks, but it is Count Mario Constantino or nobody for Amy now."

"Not the man that Sandra Baker divorced?"

"That's the man. He plays polo like a devil, speaks five or six languages, uses his own special perfume, dances divinely, and Amy is only anxious for fear he won't want her."

"Oh, Amy can't be such a fool! Didn't the second wife commit suicide?"

"The first. The second is paying him five hundred a month to keep away from her."

"But you've talked to Amy!"

"We all have. My mother's frantic about it. But don't worry. When she tells him, as she'll have to tell him, that her fortune belongs to another woman—Mother!"

The last word was a shocked whisper. For old Mrs. Marshbanks, with a face of chalk and a rustle of silks, had risen from a great chair which faced a window, and had come to the desk. She spoke in the horrified silence.

"You don't think for one instant that you can do this to Amy!" she hissed. "You don't think for one instant that this fantastic story of babies being changed will convince anyone of anything? You and Emma and this girl here cooking up all this nonsense!"

"You were listening," the judge said, dazedly. "I'm sorry, Mother," he went on after a moment of silence. "But it isn't my doing or Emma's. It's Fred's—Fred's from the beginning. And we can't—we can't stop it now."

"Could we stop it now?" Cherry demanded, frightened. "Couldn't we tell Amy something—something that wouldn't make it so hard for her? Couldn't we?"

"I can stop it now!" The long envelope was in the old woman's hands; before either of the others could move she had torn it both ways, was at the fireplace, had scattered the instantly flaming pieces of paper upon the coals. "It's stopped," she said, coming back breathless and sinking into a chair. "Your attempt to—to rob Amy and to—to slander your brother have failed, Jud! We'll hear no more of this nonsense!"

Cherry looked fearfully at the judge and he looked at his mother, who sent alternate defiant glances from one of their faces to the other.

There was no sound in the room until Amy's voice came, high and exultant, from the doorway.

"Cherry, come on upstairs, we have to talk! I've just been riding in the park. It's the divinest afternoon you ever saw, and the sunset was simply too much!"

"Go ahead, Cherry," said the Judge. Cherry left mother and son together.

Martin appeared at half past eight with the announcement that there was a gentleman to see Miss Rawlings.

Cherry went to the smaller library and found Kelly standing, turning over the leaves of a magazine on the table.

Kelly sensed at once that Cherry was not happy, and interrupted his first greeting with a disturbed "What's the trouble, Marchioness?"

"So you're Amy Marshbanks? Great Allah!"

"No proof, Kelly."

"What good would proof do? . . . Oh, I see," he said, "if there were proof, you'd come in for considerable property; I forgot that. Well, there may be some proof somewhere."

"No, but there's not. There was. At least, we think there was." Then she told him the rest of the story.

Cherry stood up. "I just heard Martin showing someone in, and I think it's Gogo. Come on in and meet him. I want to know what you think of him!"

Gogo was indeed there, dark, stunning, mustachioned, very much at ease, and with him had come two other, not very attractive, younger men. The bridge game had ended; they were sitting about the fire, drinking highballs and listening to the story of a boar hunt in which Gogo, according to his own account, had acquitted himself to advantage.

Kelly and Cherry melted into the circle, but Kelly did not stay long, and when he had excused himself Cherry went upstairs, too, feeling herself happier, in an irrational, all-pervading way, than she had ever been in her life before. He didn't love Fran; he didn't love Fran!

"I beg your pardon!" Cherry was startled by a voice that addressed her as she crossed the upper hall. It was the elder Mrs. Marshbanks who had spoken. She was standing in her bedroom doorway. "I asked if you would step into my room a moment?" the old lady said.

Oh, Kelly, come back, come back! Cherry's thoughts called desperately. She felt an impulse of actual terror. She went slowly into the luxurious warm bedroom, and at the invitation of her companion took a chair.

"I wanted to speak to you," said Mrs. Marshbanks. "I have tried before this to let you see how—how obnoxious your presence is in this house. I never would have countenanced it in the first place. For reasons that only he understands my son has taken the position that this family owes you something. Owe you! You have received a hundred times more than anything to which you were entitled already. You wormed your way in here, you made friends, you knew in your scheming little miserable soul that every time you were here I refused to leave my rooms. That didn't stop you; you came anyway! You've come between me and my granddaughter."

"Now you've come between me and my son. He talked to me tonight as no man ever should talk to a woman, least of all his mother! You came to him with your story of babies changed in their cradles, you to inherit all that belongs to Amy—no proof, of course, no proof! And so Amy's to be disgraced—ousted from her place . . ."

"You can't talk to me this way!" Cherry said, on her feet. "Good night, Mrs. Marshbanks!"

"No, don't go. Don't go, or I'll tell this whole household what you came here today to do . . ."

An abrupt stop, and a silence. Amy had called Cherry from the hall.

"Amy, come in here!" her grandmother said.

"Mrs. Marshbanks, I do beg you—I!" Cherry began. "I do beg you—I!"

Amy came in, bewildered by their manner and their looks.

"Amy, I've something to say to you!" Mrs. Marshbanks said.

"You knew Gogo came in; Cherry told you," Amy surmised defiantly. "Well, he did, for fifteen minutes! And I don't care."

"It has nothing to do with him. Sit down, Cherry, sit down."

"I won't," Cherry said flatly.

"And I beg you to wait until tomorrow and then talk to the judge about this."

"Talk to Uncle about what?" Amy asked amazedly.

"About this girl," said her grandmother, speaking in a light, panting fashion, quite beside herself with anger. "This girl who is your dear friend, and who loves you so, and is such good company, and wears Fran's outworn frocks, and is the daughter of a servant—a servant in my house! This girl who comes in now with a claim that she is Amelia Marshbanks' daughter, and you are the unwanted one!"

Amy looked from one to the other with a puzzled, but not in the least alarmed expression.

"I haven't the slightest idea what you're talking about, Gran," she said. The old woman, with a sudden look of resolution, spoke again:

"Amy, there's something you've never known, something I hoped you never would know. But you'll have to hear it now, for your Uncle feels he must tell you. Well, he'll not tell you, for I will! You never guessed that your father was also Cherry's father?"

Cherry's father?

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND

DREW PEARSON

Washington, D. C.

CAPITAL CHAFF

Bernard Baruch, who has been commuting from New York whenever the President desired his services in Washington, is now looking for permanent quarters in Washington.

Librarian of Congress Archibald MacLeish has rented the old Robert E. Lee house in Alexandria, suburb of Washington.

When a New York banker came to Washington on a government job, he wanted to rent a Georgetown home belonging to Mrs. Lionel Atwill, ex-wife of both General MacArthur and actor Atwill. But the banker balked at the rent. "I can't pay that much," he said. "I gave up a $45,000 job to come here." "That's nothing," retorted Mrs. Atwill, "I gave up a $50,000 husband!"

Once when Mrs. Atwill was asked if she didn't regret divorcing MacArthur, thus losing the limelight of a great hero, she replied, "Which is the greater figure—Josephine or Marie Louise?"

STEALING THE STARS

Washington is full of movie moguls all worried about the fact that their big stars are leaving them. Trouble is the $25,000 ceiling on incomes. Hollywood stars figure this is an opportunity to jump their contracts, and everybody is now out stealing each other's stars—or trying to.

The ins and outs of the new income ceiling are difficult. But in brief, here is how it affects Hollywood. The total salary which can be paid under the new ruling is $67,000, which, when tax deductions are made, gives a net income of $25,000. Certain other deductions also are allowable, but the treasury regulation specifically states that additional money to care for these deductions cannot be paid out by the companies. If they do pay them, the government may require them to make good the outlays.

This is what gripes the movie stars. Some of them have been getting salaries running up into the $200,000s, so to come down to $67,000 is quite a llop.

Furthermore, movie contracts are for one picture, with an option taken on the next and then the next. So with the companies unable to pay high salaries, the options on their stars are automatically broken.

HEROES WITHOUT HEADLINES

You don't hear much about them and their names don't get into the headlines, but some of the boys doing great jobs in Egypt are the tank repair crews of the U. S. ordnance corps.

When a tank is damaged in action on the Egyptian front, an American crew goes out at night with a big auto-transport truck, not unlike those which used to carry passenger cars from Detroit to retail auto dealers. They load the crippled tank on board, haul it behind the lines where mobile machine shops have been set up, and in almost no time it is repaired.

U. S. SOLDIERS—U. S. FARMERS

Forthright Sen. Charley McNary comes from Oregon, where the farmers have had a lot of trouble this year getting men to pick their fruit and harvest their wheat.

So McNary wrote to Secretary of War Stimson pointing out that there were two army cantonments in Oregon, that it might be an excellent thing for the nation's food supply and for national co-operation generally if some of the soldiers were given furloughs and allowed to help Oregon farmers with their crops.

Secretary of War Stimson wrote back rather tartly that soldiers of the U. S. army had to work at war, and that the idea was preposterous.

A little later Senator McNary noticed newspaper accounts of the way American soldiers in England had taken time to help English farmers harvest crops. So he wrote Stimson again.

"The work of our men in training for war must be shot to pieces in England," McNary said, "in view of the fact that American soldiers are working in the harvest fields."

The secretary of war replied a little lamely that if American troops in England were working in the harvest fields, they were doing it on their own time. But he welcomed no more suggestions about helping farmers here at home.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Undersecretary of State Welles has made it clear that Chairman Ed Flynn of the Democratic national committee will be appointed to a Latin-American diplomatic post only over his dead body.

The President, always an optimist, will make one more attempt to bring the AFL and CIO together by inviting Bill Green and Phil Murray to the White House. Labor leaders say privately, however, that there will be no agreement. Both sides will patch up a jurisdictional truce and agree to refrain from membership raids for the duration.

Navy department communiques are short and sweet. In the navy department's press section, answering queries from newspaper offices, are two young officers, Lieut. Short and Lieut. Sweet.

GET A ROOF THAT CAN "Take it!"
MOST roofs have been leaking for 3 or 4 years before the damage reaches the stage where water marks show on the plaster.
Once the damage reaches that stage, the cost of repairs to plaster and household articles is always more than what it would have cost to have re-roofed in time.
Here's a simple test you yourself can make: after the next hard rain, go up in your attic and look at the roof-boards. If they are wet in spots, watch out for leaks sooner or later. To be completely safe against leaks, you should have your home re-roofed at once.
Logan-Long Asphalt Shingles are best for re-roofing. They are applied right over the old roof quickly and economically. We will be glad to show you these tested and approved asphalt shingles without obligation.

Somewhere in Australia Oct. 19, 1942

My dear Mrs. Rogers:
I'm sorry that I haven't written to you sooner, but they really keep us boys busy most of the day. Well, suppose by this time you folks in Tinley know that I'm in Australia, if not, you know now. I've been down here for quite a while. The people in Australia sure treat the American soldiers good. There are sure some big snakes down here. We killed two carpet snakes 12 feet long. The python snakes get as big as 20 feet long. We've got a baby kangaroo in my tent, and it sure is a pretty little thing.

Yes, we sure got a nice USO for the American soldiers. The Australians really built a nice one. I'm afraid there isn't any more room to write in this V letter, so I will have to close. I remain, Sam Greco

Dear Friends:
I think it's about time I let my friends in Tinley know how I'm doing. I have been shifted around so much and I haven't been in one spot long enough to really describe any of the places.

The town of New Orleans is a very colorful place because right now the Temp is about 80 and we can still roll up our sleeves without getting goose pimples. That seems funny here because it is November and I've never been down south.

The camp is located two blocks from Lake Pontchartrain which runs into the gulf. On one side of the camp is an Army air base and on the other side is a Navy air base. It's swampy around here and there are a lot of mosquitoes so they issue us nettings. The ground here is all sand and sea shells just like a beach.

If I was to describe this town I would say it's about 100 years behind the place is full of old time French and Spanish houses. It's not a very good soldier town, in fact the people don't like us at all. Maybe it's because the town is full of soldiers, sailors and marines. I had one person in town tell me that this is the biggest boom since Napoleon's time, and prices are sky high. Canal street, which is the main street is the biggest one in town. All the rest are no bigger than the width of a truck. The buildings on each side of it has old fancy grilles balconies which almost touch each other.

Right now I'm waiting to be assigned to an Air Depot group. They're the men that work on the planes. I have already gone to the Prate and Whitney engine overall special school and am qualified for one. The place I live in is called Tent City, where the men await to be assigned to one. There are all kinds of specialists here and I think they are getting ready to transfer us all at once to make a new air depot group. Right now I'm a Platoon Sergeant and give my men drill instructions. I have charge of fifty, three men.

I also want to express my thanks for sending the Tinley Park Times so I can keep track of my friends and I also want to thank you for sending me the cigarettes and razor blades as they sure come in handy.

Well that's all I can think of right now, and my new address is: Sgt. Richard Mason, Det. "C" Tent City, N. O., Army Air Base, New Orleans, La.

I remain, your friend,
Richard Mason

War Production and Electric Power in Northern Illinois

Far behind the battlefields are the humming war plants which supply our armed forces with tanks, planes, ships and guns.

In this great war-production program... the cutting, welding, riveting and fitting of war machines...electricity is providing vital power needed for record breaking speed.

Maintaining this constant flow of electrical energy to the war plants of Northern Illinois is an assignment to which our facilities are devoted until final victory on the land, on the sea and in the air.

The modern General Lee tanks are electrically welded for strength. The result is a streamlined tank of fighting power for America's armed forces.

Electrically operated production lines keep a steady flow of steel fighting power constantly on the move toward completion.

Each a 28-ton mass of steel, power and speed, these tanks are mounted on flatcars, ready to leave for the fighting fronts.

Thanksgiving

Ever Heard the Story of the FIRST THANKSGIVING?

Imagine that first harvest Thanksgiving in America more than three hundred years ago. It probably started while families were gathered at someone's home after the day's work. The talk probably turned to events of the day and the bountiful year they've been enjoying....and in such informal way as this, perhaps, they proclaimed the first Thanksgiving! Carrying thru their plans was not so simple, for protection against the Indians was needed all along the way. But they were successful because they knew all precautions taken for safety could not be too great.

YOU cannot take too many precautions! Protect your valuables and savings; protect your family when you no longer can. Protect your business with proper financing. Inquire about our many services .!

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The government's goal is to produce synthetic rubber at a rate of more than 800,000 tons per year by the end of 1943.

Even without a war program requiring tremendous quantities of rubber, the U. S. used 648,000 tons of rubber in 1940.

Any tire made in the last two or three years is good for eight to ten years if not worn in service.

In 1933, 900 farm tractors were sold with rubber tires and 3,000 steel-wheeled tractors were changed over to rubber. Six years later 161,500 rubber-tired tractors were bought by American farmers and in addition 45,300 were converted to rubber wheels.

Following a steadily advancing position, tire life in the U. S. has roughly doubled in each of the past decades.

Hippety-Hop Over the Globe

By Beverly Smith

(WNU Feature—Through special arrangement with American Magazine)

I landed this afternoon at an airport in Maryland. Where do you think I was last night? In Iceland. And yesterday morning I was in London.

That's the way the U. S. Army Air Transport command plays hippety-hop with global geography.

Primary jobs of the Air Transport command are: first, to take planes as they roll off factory assembly lines and fly them to army airfields in the U. S. A. or to the fighting fronts anywhere in the world; second, to pick up vital loads of men and materials, which cannot wait for surface ships, and fly them to the point where they are wanted, anywhere in the world. Simply a world-wide air delivery service, combined with a world-wide flying freight and passenger service. Sounds simple, doesn't it? But it isn't.

After spending weeks talking with its mechanics and high officers, its pilots, navigators, and weathermen, I still find trouble describing the Air Transport command. It grows literally faster than you can write. Already it is larger than all the pre-war air lines of the world combined. Already Brig. Gen. Harold L. George, in command, looks forward to the day when it will be ten times its present size.

But it isn't the size; it's the importance to our war effort. Not long ago, in an inaccessible part of Alaska, an important military hospital was burned to the ground. An SOS was sent to the command. Material and equipment were flown in. Within 36 hours a 24-bed emergency hospital was set up and operating. This freighting operation would have taken weeks with surface transportation.

Planes Versus Ships.

"But how," I wondered, "do transport charges, with even the latest model air transport plane, carrying only 20 tons, compare with those of a ship carrying 6,000 tons?"

Here, the Air Transport command, with its world-wide operations, is proving out a new tonnage-mile arithmetic. For example, take 80 cargo planes 5 tons each. That makes 400 tons. In one month those cargo planes can make 15 trips each, while the merchant ship is making one trip. Fifteen times 400 equals 6,000. Thus, 80 such modern cargo planes can do the work of one big merchant ship. And the planes don't have to worry about submarines.

Of course, the ton-mileage cost of plane freight is still far above that of ship freight, but it is creeping down. Mass production of the big sky-trucks is just getting well under way: costs will go steadily down; efficiencies and pay-loads are going steadily up. The point where valuable express freight may find cargo planes cheaper than railroads, trucks, or ships is coming into sight. And then?

It's a Small World.

Yes, the world is making one of its swift changes under our very eyes as it did when Fulton's first steamboat chugged up the Hudson, or when the golden spike was driven into the first transcontinental railroad, or when auto pioneers began tinkering with mass-production assembly lines.

Little over a year ago, this terrestrial child prodigy was set up under the name of the Ferrying Command by a presidential order directing the army to help speed up delivery of lease-lend planes to Britain. It started with two officers and a clerk. On June 9, 1941, an army pilot took off from a factory with a new plane and delivered it to the British in Montreal.

The events of December 7 boosted the infant command to world dimensions. American production of armaments and planes reached record levels. American production, we agreed, would win the war.

Recently I passed some time at a great Air Transport command field in the eastern part of the United States. A year ago this land was a potato patch. Now it is crisscrossed with runways each over a mile long.

Barracks have been built, hotels brought into service, to house the fliers and maintenance men. Dispersed about the field, as far as the eye can reach, are heavy bombers, light bombers, big transport planes. Some have just come in, others are about to take off. Tank trucks rumble about feeding fuel into the planes, while mechanics give the final check-over before the planes leave for Persia or Chungking, or Russia, England or Alaska.

This is something new under the sun—a Grand Central Station of the

Sportlight by GRANTLAND RICE

BILL BRADY handled Jim Corbett when the pompadoured stylist beat John L. Sullivan 50 years ago. Later on the able Mr. Brady directed Jim Jeffries, another of the old-time greats.

For more than 50 years Mr. Brady has kept in close touch with boxing and the fight game in general, but he admits now that no one can guess what might happen beyond the fog of war.

"The length of the war will be a big factor," Bill says, "and who can say how long this war will last?"

"We know that after another year or two in the army that neither Joe Louis nor Billy Conn can hope to be what they were at their peak form. I am referring to speed, skill, timing and reflexes. They may be just as healthy and just as powerful, but there is almost sure to be a dull edge on their sharpness."

"This doesn't mean, however, that they will be outclassed if they return to ring action. For who is coming along to show much more?"

The Difference

"This war is different from the first World war," Mr. Brady continued. "The kids of 18 and 19 now are going into service. There is more boxing now, and there will be more and more boxing than any extended sweep of army and navy camps ever knew. This applies to millions."

"There will be a big average improvement on the boxing side. More men will know how to handle their fists and use their feet in the ring. But developing a champion under war conditions is another matter. It can be done, but it will take time—plenty of time after the war."

"We might take the case of Gene Tunney," Mr. Brady went on. "He went from the marines to the heavy-weight title. He was a fine all-around fighter."

"But don't forget that the armistice came in November, 1918, and 1926 had arrived before Tunney reached the top. Here was a smart, hard-working fellow who trained perfectly. Yet he needed eight years to get there. Three years after the war Gene was still just another floundering heavy-weight, as he proved against Soldier Jones—I think Dempsey-Carpenter card."

"Gene's boxing improvement came after he left the marines—and you won't find as many ambitious, determined young fellows as Tunney was in his eight-year campaign. And on his way up he had to weather one of the worst beatings in ring history—from 160-pound Harry Greb."

that was the name—on the Dempsey-Carpenter card.

"Gene's boxing improvement came after he left the marines—and you won't find as many ambitious, determined young fellows as Tunney was in his eight-year campaign. And on his way up he had to weather one of the worst beatings in ring history—from 160-pound Harry Greb."

Someone—But Who?

"As I said before, there are several millions taking boxing lessons now from good instructors all over the country—camp by camp," Bill said. "The majority from this big group never would have boxed if it hadn't been for camp training. Naturally, many of these will show undeveloped talent that may lead to something after the war."

"We have several thousand kids here taking boxing lessons, learning at least how to stand and how to use their hands," Jack said. "Naturally, the great majority of these never could be good fighters in the ring. It would be the same if you taught the fundamentals of golf to several thousand youngsters. From this group you might get five or six possible champions—maybe not even that many. But you would get a few who could take high ranking."

"It is the same way in boxing. I don't think many people know how many have been trying to get some place in the ring game—up in the thousands—but less than 1 per cent ever get anywhere."

One of the Toughest

"Boxing is one of the toughest games in the world to face. When you have a heavyweight champion, for example, you rarely have more than one or two challengers who are any good at all. Baseball and football and golf are full of stars, but there are never many good fighters—I mean topnotchers."

"I agree with Bill Brady," the Manassas Mauler went on, "that out of several millions who are being given intensive training under many good instructors, we should be able to dig up many more good ring fighters than we have had before. But this is something that belongs to the future, not to the present. We won't have the answer for some time, but it must be on the side of youth when we get it. Just as in any other game, the younger they get started the better chance they have." The truth of Dempsey's statements will be proved in the future.

Grantland Rice

Speaking Sports by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

WHEN the Brooklyn Dodgers signed Branch Rickey to a five-year contract as general manager, the club secured the services of one of the most powerful men in baseball.

Mr. Rickey has an uncanny knack of judging men. He is a polished orator, graduate lawyer, churchman and holder of numerous degrees. He has properly been called the father of the "chain store" system of using smaller clubs as a recruiting grounds for young players.

In addition, Mr. Rickey is no stuffed shirt. He still works as hard to achieve success as when he was teaching country school in the hills of southern Ohio.

Rickey coached baseball at the University of Michigan during the seasons of 1912 and 1913. He "discovered" such stars as George Sisler and Johnny Lavan for the St. Louis Browns. At the urging of owner Robert Lee Hedges, he became a part-time scout for the St. Louis Americans and finally came to the front office as secretary. He became manager of the Browns in 1916.

Named President

The following year a group of St. Louis men bought the Cardinals. Rickey was named president and field manager and remained at this job until 1924 when he was made general manager of the extensive Cardinal system he helped create.

Rickey liked to get his ball players young—preferably at the age of 16 or 17—and bring them up in the Cardinals' farm organization. The system paid dividends—not only in strong Cardinal teams, but in direct profits.

Through their chain system the Cards developed more players than they could use and there was a ready market for them. Quite a few National league stars were trained in the chain store system and then sold to a rival club.

While quite a few managers are good judges of a new player's ability, seemingly fewer of them can sense the first signs that a star player is slipping. Rickey had an unerring instinct in this regard. He sold players who appeared to be at their peak but who, in his judgment, were starting the long trip downhill.

Memorable Deals

The Cubs bought Dizzy Dean from him for $185,000 in a deal which will be long remembered in Chicago. Diz was through and didn't take long to prove it. Joe Medwick went to the Dodgers for $100,000 and several players. Brooklyn doesn't have much to say concerning that particular investment. Johnny Mize went to the Giants for another $100,000. The Cards still won the pennant.

Rickey pointed out that "The Cardinals offer the real challenge in this Brooklyn job. They will be hurt by the draft comparatively less than any other team in the majors. I know they can bring 11 major-league pitchers, four catchers, their whole infield plus Ray Sanders, the extra first baseman, and at least six outfielders to camp. All those men are married and are fathers. They are hurt most in the outfield where they've lost Enos Slaughter. Terry Moore also is unmarried."

It is obvious that changes will be made in Brooklyn. Rickey also remarked that "The alarming thing about the Dodgers is the number of 10-year men on the team. The direction and rapidity of their descent over the last 40 days of the season is cause for concern in planning for 1943. And yet, it is a fine team . . . and, while most of the players are veterans, they are competitive veterans and know how to fight. But I have always said that it is a bigger mistake to hold on to a mediocre player too long than to let go of a good one too soon."

Rickey's actions through the years prove that he means that last very logical statement.

Professor Rickey

Mr. Rickey is a man of strong beliefs. He looks like a college professor and once was. He taught at Allegheny college in western Pennsylvania before reporting to the Browns in 1905. A graduate of Ohio Wesleyan, he later became a trustee for that institution. Active in church circles, he would not, for years, attend a Sunday game. He even turned over his managerial chores to one of his assistants on the Sabbath. Unquestionably it will be quite a change from the MacPhail regime.

Treat Constipation This Gentler Way!

Many folks say that almost as bad as constipation are harsh cathartics and purges. That's because many medicinal laxatives work this way: they either prod the intestines into action or draw moisture into them from other parts of the body.

Now comes news of a gentler and pleasanter way of treating constipation, for the millions of people with normal intestines whose trouble is due to lack of "bulk" in the diet. This way is by eating KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN, a crisp, delicious cereal, and drinking plenty of water. ALL-BRAN, unlike many medicinal laxatives, acts principally on the contents of the colon and helps you to have easy, normal elimination. ALL-BRAN is made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is not helped by this simple treatment, better see your doctor.

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages are sometimes further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval.
